BRAND RESEARCH

1. Definition: why each brand qualifies as emerging (recent, distinctive, still gaining recognition).

Founded in 2016, Ottolinger qualifies as emerging due to its independent status, niche audience, and distinctive deconstructed aesthetic that challenges mainstream luxury despite growing presence at Paris Fashion Week.

Ottolinger founders: Christa Bösch and Cosima Gadiant

2. Short analysis of their communication style.

The brand utilizes an experimental, raw tone, employing minimal storytelling and sculptural visuals to highlight material transformation, appealing specifically to fashion-literate, underground creative communities.

Ottolinger 's Instagram page

3. What strikes you personally and why.

The brand exploits the tension between destruction and transformation to project radical wearer confidence. It reinterprets punk aesthetics into a contemporary language of female empowerment.

Fashion Show SS26

4. How it connects to your own creative research, vision, or interests.

Creative synergy is found in playful collaborations (Puma, Tinder) that demystify luxury norms. Research focus: garments as socially relevant displays for artistic expression and sustainability.

Ottolinger collaborations with Puma and Lalisa

5. Cultural agency: how the brand relates to culture beyond products.

Operating as a creative ecosystem, Ottolinger collaborates with underground artists to subvert luxury traditions. Shows function as performance art, reflecting global anxieties and boundary-pushing aesthetics.

6. Is it contemporary, future-oriented, innovative?

Defined by “post-human craft” and “apocalyptic futurism,” the brand explores technical material experimentation (resins, burned fabrics) to redefine luxury through destructive and improvisational processes.

Men’s section on the e-commerce website

7. Does it focus on sustainability, craft, materials, technology, disruption, reinterpretation of classics, or imaginary?

Defined by aesthetic disruption and radical reinterpretation of classics. While utilizing recycled materials, the brand currently prioritizes creative expression over measurable, certified sustainability leadership.

EDITORIAL CONCEPT

VISUAL SHOCK

Visual shock means “To be suprised by what your eyes are experiencing”.

REFLECTION: THE VISUAL SHOCK MANIFESTO

Ottolinger is not passive beauty; it is the intentional collision of high-gloss luxury and industrial trauma. We move from “looking” at a product to witnessing its mutation. We don’t hide the guts, the melting points, or the glitches—we celebrate them.

Our visuals focus on the clash of materials. We capture the high-tension moment where soft skin meets “ugly” resin and scorched edges. A garment is most alive when it looks like it is either being born or being destroyed.

What appears “messy” or “broken” is a rebellious act of freedom. We embrace the Energy of Tension. Our luxury is not flowery or traditional; it is subversively honest, raw, and punchy.

SHOOTING LIST

	LOOK	REFERENCE	MODEL	EQUIPMENT	NOTES	MAKEUP/HAIR
LOOK 1				Reflex Camera, Polarizing Filter, Tripod, Reflector, Diffuser, Light Stand & Sandbags (weights), phone	Wide camera angle to show the full look. The model will be earning her weight onto on side of her body and bent down over that side tilting her head looking at the camera at an angle. There will be a fish eye lense on the camera. The image is still giving 'visual shock' as twe see the full ottolinger look from a different angle, such as the inspo picture.
LOOK 2				Reflex Camera, Polarizing Filter, Tripod, Reflector, Diffuser, Light Stand & Sandbags (weights), phone	The focus for this picture in`is on the bottom hal of the dress, the inspo pic puts an emphasis on the legs which is where the pattern of the ottolinger look ls. We can see the look but it gives the viewer a different perspective of the look. There is more of a 'visual shock' element as it is not just the generic pose that you would usually see in a lookbook shoot.
LOOK 3				Reflex Camera, Polarizing Filter, Tripod, Reflector, Diffuser, Light Stand & Sandbags (weights), phone	The inspo pic for this shoot will capture the essence of 'visual shock'. The look will be fully visible by the way the model is posing and the green atmosphere that is preset in all of the inspo pic give another sense of 'vi-sual shock' to the look .
